

Austrian 3-Year Warranty Air-Cooled Switch 400G

AI Overview

A 3-year warranty for an air-cooled 400G switch in Austria typically includes statutory warranty rights plus optional manufacturer or service provider support for software and hardware maintenance. Warranty Overview in Austria In Austria, a statutory warranty is the legal liability of the seller for defects in goods or services. Consumers can assert claims against the seller for repair, replacement, or price reduction if a defect occurs, and these rights cannot generally be waived or limited in consumer transactions . The statutory warranty period for new goods is usually two years, but it can be extended by a manufacturer's guarantee or service contract . For digital services or goods with embedded software, such as network switches, the warranty also covers defects affecting software functionality . Manufacturer or Service Provider Support For a 400G air-cooled switch, companies like FS offer a 3-year standard maintenance and support plan (PicOS® Standard Maintenance & Support) that includes: Installation, configuration, and operation of the switch's operating system (PicOS®) Error corrections and troubleshooting Software updates and upgrades Access to technical support via email or phone Self-help documentation and guidance for network management If the support service is renewed after expiration, the effective date is calculated from the renewal order date; if renewed before expiration, it starts after the original service ends . Purchasing only the license without support is possible, but it limits access to OS upgrades, technical support, and trouble ticket systems . Practical Implications Statutory warranty ensures you can request repair or replacement for defects present at delivery. 3-year support plan enhances this by providing proactive software maintenance, technical assistance, and operational guidance. Consumers in Austria can choose to assert claims against the seller under...
