

Manufacturers of Aluminum Armored Indoor Optical Cables

AI Overview

Leading manufacturers of aluminum armored indoor optical cables include Corning, Proterial Cable America, Abalone, and OCC Fiber, offering high-performance, fire-resistant, and crush-protected solutions for indoor installations. Key Manufacturers and Products

1. Corning Corning offers the FREEDM® loose tube gel-free interlocking armored cables, which feature spirally wrapped aluminum interlocking armor for superior crush resistance and ruggedness. These cables are flame-retardant, riser-rated, and suitable for industrial and high-traffic indoor areas, supporting high-fiber-count trunking applications. They also include innovative water-blocking tapes for easier installation and maintenance, and are NEC® listed for indoor use.
2. Proterial Cable America Proterial provides tight-buffered indoor armored fiber optic cables with lightweight aluminum interlock armor, designed for flexibility, strength, and easy handling. These cables support Gigabit, 10G, 40G, and 100G Ethernet, Fiber Channel, video distribution, security systems, and building automation. The aluminum armor eliminates the need for inner ducts or conduits, making them ideal for intra-building plenum installations. They use color-coded bend-insensitive Corning fibers for reliable high-speed data transmission.
3. Abalone Abalone manufactures indoor simplex, duplex, and multi-fiber armored cables with steel or aluminum armor, fire-retardant jackets, and crush resistance. These cables are suitable for data centers, industrial networks, and secure indoor installations, offering high-speed performance and easy splicing for FTTH, LAN, and other indoor applications.
4. OCC Fiber OCC Fiber produces the DX-Series Distribution Aluminum Interlocking Armored (ILA) riser-rated cables, designed for indoor distribution and riser applications. These cables provide aluminum interlocking armor for mechanical protection and are suitable for structur...
